

Gangtok

One of the most attractive locations to visit in all of India is Gangtok, which is situated directly in the heart of the Himalayan range. It perfectly captures India's vast and diverse landscape. This is true for the majority of Sikkim. Sikkim, the second-smallest state in terms of area after Goa and the state with the fewest people, is still a top tourist destination because of cities like Gangtok, which boast an incredible geographic location and magnificent surroundings.

Tsomgo Lake

About 40 kilometres (25 miles) from the state capital Gangtok, in the East Sikkim region of the Indian state of Sikkim, is a glacier lake known as Tsomgo Lake. The lake, which is 3,753 metres (12,313 feet) above sea level, is frozen throughout the year. The indigenous Sikkimese people have a tremendous respect for the lake's surface, which changes colour with the seasons. In the middle of May, as the winter season ends, the lake's edge bursts with beautiful varieties of flowers. Numerous bird species, notably Brahminy ducks, can also be observed in the lake's vicinity. Red Pandas are also seen here.

Nathula Pass

Nathu La is a mountain pass in the Himalayan ranges that connects Sikkim with China. It is one of the world's highest motorable roads. Nathu La, one of the most significant Himalayan passes in the nation, is located on the Indo-Tibetan border at a height of 14,450 feet. Nathu and La both refer to listening ears and passing. One of the three open trading border crossings between India and China, Nathu La is well known for its stunning beauty and lovely surroundings. Most of this place is still rather cool. Visitors have to get a permit.

Namgyal Institute of Tibetology.

The Namgyal Institute of Tibetology was founded in 1958, and since then it has financed and encouraged studies on the Sikkimese people's religion, history, language, art, and culture. The NIT library houses a museum of Tibetan iconography and religious art in addition to one of the greatest collections of Tibetan works outside of Tibet. Since 1964, it has released a number of books as well as the Bulletin of Tibetology.

Rumtek Monastery

The monastery, which is around 23 kilometres from Gangtok, was constructed by the ninth Karmapa under the direction of Sikkim's fourth King. The Karmapa Lama, the third-highest monk in Tibetan Buddhism, resides in Rumtek Monastery, the largest monastery in Sikkim. It is also known as the Dharmachakra Center and is one of the most significant locations outside of Tibet for the Kagyu (Black Hat) school of Tibetan Buddhism.
